EXECUTION CAUSES GREAT SENSATION

General Salih Damad Pasha Meets Death on Public Scaffold.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.

GREAT is the sensation which has been created throughout the Levant by the public execution, by hanging, at Constantinople, of General Salih Damad Pasha, a nephew of the present Sultan and of his predecessor on the throne, Abdul Hamid. If he was thus sent to the gallows, to which his dead body was left hanging for nearly four hours as a lesson to evildoers, it was because he had been proved guilty by court martial of having instigated the murder of Marshal Shevket Pasha, the grand vizier, who was shot down while driving through the streets of Stambul in his automobile. A check for $5,000, bearing the signature of the Pasha, was found in the pocket of one of the actual perpetrators of the shooting, on his being searched after capture, and this led to disclosures which left no doubt as to the guilt of Salih Damad Pasha, a nephew of the Sultan, indeed, in former times the Sultan's were wont to take the lives of as many of their kinsmen as possible, for self-protection; but the killing was always done in private, either by means of strangling with a silken cord, or by poisoning with opium. But this is the first occasion of any one of them being consigned to the ignominy of public gallows.

Salih was the son-in-law of the late Prince Ahmet Kemal Eddine, the third brother of the present Sultan. That prince had an only daughter, the Sultan's Munir, who, with the rank of imperial highness, was married in 1907 to General Salih Pasha. The word "Damad" affixed to his name is a title accorded to all those who marry full-blooded imperial princesses, and it may be recalled that another of the Damads, namely, Mahmud Pasha, husband of the Imperial Princess Seniha, was obliged to fly from Constantinople some twelve years ago, in order to escape imprisonment for having been concerned in a revolutionary conspiracy against his brother-in-law, Sultan Abdul Hamid. He died in exile at Brussels.

As a general rule, when members of reigning houses of Europe are implicated in cases of homicide, they escape the punishment that would fall to ordinary citizens. Thus, the eldest son of King Peter, George Karageorgievitch, whose valet succumbed to maltreatment, on his guilt being established by the supreme court of his native land, was merely deprived of his rank and prerogatives and was compelled to yield his place as crown prince to his younger brother Alexander. The father of King Peter, the late Prince Alexander Karageorgievitch, was while residing in Hungary, declared by the courts of that country to be guilty of instigating the assassination of Michael Obrenovitch, ruler of Servia, at Belgrade, in June, 1858. But instead of being arrested, all that was done to him was that he was expelled from the country as an undesirable foreigner.

Ex-Empress Charlotte of Mexico celebrated the other day her seventy-fourth birthday, at her chateau of Bouchout, in the vicinity of Brussels, and the event was observed with far more pomp and circumstance than the reign of her brother, Leopold II. The latter endeavored to keep all her relatives away from her, and to prevent any of her Belgian, English, French and Austrian kinsfolk from coming into contact with her. This attitude of the Empress toward her family has not been without its consequences, and it may be said that he was misusing the great fortune which she had inherited from her father, and of which he had secured control as administrator.

Since King Albert has been on the throne, all has been changed and his relatives cannot be said to have enjoyed their full reason, yet her life has become much brighter. Thus, she was able to understand and appreciate the telegrams of congratulation, and the magnificent tributes of flowers sent to her by her brother-in-law, Emperor Francis Joseph, from Vienna, and by her niece, Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians, from Montreux, on the Lake of Geneva. King Albert motored all the way from Ostend to bring his good wishes and congratulations in person, together with a huge wreath of flowers. The Empress, however, had enjoyed the visit of her nephew, who is touching in his solicitude for her welfare, and in the affection which he displays to her. She has been accustomed to him from his early childhood. For the only one of her relatives who seemed King Leopold to have enjoyed his full reason, yet her life has become much brighter. The Empress, however, had enjoyed the visit of her nephew, who is touching in his solicitude for her welfare, and in the affection which he displays to her. She has been accustomed to him from his early childhood. For the only one of her relatives who seemed King Leopold to have enjoyed his full reason, yet her life has become much brighter. Thus, she was able to understand and appreciate the telegrams of congratulation, and the magnificent tributes of flowers sent to her by her brother-in-law, Emperor Francis Joseph, from Vienna, and by her niece, Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians, from Montreux, on the Lake of Geneva. King Albert motored all the way from Ostend to bring his good wishes and congratulations in person, together with a huge wreath of flowers.
